

U.S. Navy Destroyers Lost or Damaged During World War II

Compiled by Tin Can Sailors
The National Association of Destroyer Veterans

Introduction

The destroyers of the United States Navy played key roles throughout World War II, starting with pre-Pearl Harbor convoy escort and patrol duty and continuing through the post-surrender occupation of Japan. Time and time again destroyers proved their worth as they carried out difficult and often dangerous assignments. As a result of going "in harm's way," many destroyers were lost or damaged. Although the majority were of these ships were lost or damaged due to enemy action, some were involved in other situations — often equally deadly — such as storms, collisions, groundings, or friendly fire.

Through this publication we honor those ships, the men who were killed or wounded aboard them, and those men who survived uninjured but who were also in places of great danger. Much was demanded of them and they came through. They left a legacy, a tradition of excellence and courage, for every Sailor who has come afterward.

Tin Can Sailors

Tin Can Sailors is the national association of destroyer veterans. Founded in 1976, we now have over 21,000 members.

Our members receive a quarterly 40-page newsletter. Widely regarded as the finest of its type, the newsletter contains a mix of on naval history, individual ship histories, shipmate memories, reunion notices, and much more.

Members of Tin Can Sailors may also attend the many events we sponsor each year. These include a national reunion and more than a dozen one-day Bull Sessions covering many regions of the country. Our Field Day program provides opportunities to spend weekends living and working aboard a destroyer that has become a museum/memorial ship.

The Tin Can Sailors' Grant Program provides financial assistance to destroyers serving as museum/memorial ships. These grants help to pay the costs of restoring and maintaining these historic vessels.

Notes

The list is based in part on a set of reports entitled Summary of War Damage to U.S. Battleships, Carriers, Cruisers, and Destroyers. These reports were classified Confidential and contained the best information available at the time. The information was wrong or incomplete in some cases. Examples include:

USS Pillsbury (DD-227) was probably sunk by 3 Japanese cruisers and 2 Japanese destroyers somewhere off the Java coast. There were no survivors and Japanese records provided little information after the war.

USS Pope (DD-225) was sunk by Japanese cruisers and aircraft.

USS Edsall (DD-219) may have been damaged by two Japanese battleships. It is reasonably certain that she was sunk south of Christmas Island by a Japanese cruiser. It appears there were five survivors, all of whom later died as prisoners of war, so little is known.

USS Stewart (DD-224) was abandoned in dry dock after demolition charges had been exploded to render her useless to the enemy. In fact, she was repaired and served as Japanese Patrol Vessel Number 102. She was recovered by the United States at the end of the war. The ship was ultimately sunk as a target in May 1946.

The War Damage series treats Pearl Harbor damage as a separate topic since the conditions there were unlikely to be repeated elsewhere. The series does not categorize these ships as "lost" or "damaged" since salvage efforts were planned for nearly all of them. Three destroyers (Cassin, Downes, and Shaw) were damaged so severely while in floating drydocks at Pearl Harbor that there can be little doubt that they would have sunk otherwise. In two instances (Cassin and Downes) machinery was salvaged and new hulls built. Data for destroyers lost to causes other than direct enemy action and data for Destroyer Minesweepers (DMS), Destroyer Minelayers (DM), High Speed Transports (APD), and Seaplane Tenders - Destroyer (AVD) were compiled from various sources.

Dates of ship losses are not always easy to state since some ships went down days or weeks after the damage occurred. Some ships damaged during the last months of the war were not repaired. If the damage was severe and the ship not needed, the vessel was just scrapped.

Different sources sometimes use different names for the same geographic location. For example, one source may say a ship was hit at Ormoc Bay while another might refer it as the Comotes Sea. Yet another might say Leyte and a fourth might say just say Philippines.

Upper left: USS Kearny (DD-432) at Iceland after being torpedoed in October 1941. USS Monssen (DD-436) is alongside.

Upper right: USS Helm (DD-388) was damaged by a bomb that exploded close aboard during the attack on Pearl Harbor.

Upper right: The USS O'Brien (DD-415) was torpedoed on 15 September 1942. After temporary repairs were made at Espiritu Santo, she sailed to New Caledonia where additional repairs were made. She then began the trek to San Francisco; her first stop being Suva, Fiji, where she is seen here, still with a gaping hole in her bow. Two days after leaving Fiji, the ship's weakened structure began to fail and she was lost.

Upper left: Shortly after the attack on Pearl Harbor, Cassin (DD-372) lies against Downes (DD-375). Cassin rolled off her blocks as the dry dock was flooded in an effort to help control fires.

Lower left: USS Cassin (DD-372) leans against USS Downes (DD-375) in Pearl Harbor Dry Dock Number 1 on 28 December 1941. One 5" gun remains on Cassin, others have been removed as salvage efforts have begun.

Lower left: Hambleton was placed in dry dock and a forty-foot section was removed from her amidships. Here preparations are being made for removal of a boiler.

Upper right: USS Murphy (DD-603) was sliced in half by the tanker Bulkoil. The forward portion of the ship sank within minutes. The after portion is seen here at New York Navy Yard on 23 October 1943, two days after the collision.

Upper and lower left: USS Kendrick (DD-612) was struck in her stern by a torpedo dropped from an aircraft. These views were taken while she was in dry dock.

Upper left and lower left: USS Caldwell (DD-605) was hit by a suicide plane on 12 December 1944. The plane crashed into the bridge. Its bomb detonated near the forward 5" gun. A bomb from another attacker hit almost simultaneously causing the damage to the port side visible here.

Upper right: USS Abner Reed (DD-526) struck a mine while in Aleutian waters on 17 August 1943. The damaged portion of the stern soon broke off and sank. The ship was towed to Adak, Alaska, by USS Ute (AT-76) Temporary repairs were made over the next month after which she was towed to Puget Sound Naval Shipyard.

Above left: After the USS Meredith (DD-726) struck a mine while supporting the invasion of Normandy in June 1944, she was towed to an anchorage in the Bay of the Seine. A subsequent bombing raid weakened the ship further and ship then broke in half.

Upper right: The photograph of USS Smith (DD-378) was taken from the USS South Dakota (BB-57) at the moment she was struck by a suicide plane during the Battle of Santa Cruz on 26 October 1942.

Lower right: USS Benham (DD-796) sliced into USS Uhlmann (DD-687) during training exercises off Hawaii in April 1944. Uhlmann suffered damage to her hull and to her superstructure. This photo was taken prior to the damaged portions of Uhlmann's deckhouse were being removed.

The badly damaged bow of USS Benham (DD-796) was removed and discarded. A new bow was attached and the ship resumed her career.

USS Wadleigh (DD-689) was assisting minesweepers in September 1944 when she struck a mine on the starboard side amidships. Three of her large machinery spaces flooded. The ship listed to starboard, settled by the stern, and began to sag so severely that it was thought she might break in half.

Above: USS Halligan (DD-584) struck a mine on 28 March 1945. The explosion detonated her forward 5" magazines. The ship forward of the forward stack was destroyed.

USS William D. Porter (DD-579) plunges to the bottom after a suicide plane attack. Rescue ships carrying her crew are departing the scene.

USS Barry (APD-29) was hit by a suicide plane in May 1945. The badly damaged hulk was equipped with smoke pots and remotely controlled machine guns to make her an attractive target. She was then used as a decoy to attract other suicide planes away from other ships. She is seen here alongside USS Lipan (ATF-85) awaiting her new role as a decoy.

A Japanese Zeke aircraft hit USS Halsey Powell (DD-686) as she was alongside USS Hancock (CV-19) to take on fuel. The plane went through the main deck and exited through the starboard shell plating below the waterline causing considerable damage to her after compartments.

The suicide plane that struck USS Sigsbee (DD-502) destroyed most of the ship aft of her fifth 5" gun mount. She is seen here with decks awash, awaiting a tow. These photos were taken from USS Miami (CL-89).

USS Lindsey (DM-32) was struck by two Japanese Val aircraft on 12 April 1945. About sixty feet of the ship's bow was totally destroyed.
